Abstract. The social constructionism abandons the idea of constructivist that individual's mind represents a mirror of reality. The constructionism is focused on relations and sustains the individual's role in social construction of realities. "Maps for the same territory" seems to be the essence of constructivist.

(PDF) AN INTRODUCTION TO SOCIAL CONSTRUCTIONISM

Rom Harre has written on the social construction of personality and emotional behaviour which has touched on some of the more important implications for the theory and practice of therapy (1984, 1988). Harre has also produced a series of works on the body, individuality, social life and motivation (1985, 1991, 1993).
